LAXITY AT UNIVERSITY

To the Editor: A man named Frank Rinaldi, a graduate student and English instructor at the University of North Carolina in Chapel Hill, was convicted of first degree murder and sentenced to life in prison.

I have no comment about the crime or the trial. That was a matter for the jury to decide. The thing that bothers me and a great number of North Carolina citizens is this: It was brought out during the trial that Rinaldi was suspected of being a homosexual, also that he had been fired by the Central Intelligence Agency for a "security violation."

Why was such a man of questionable morals and a security violation allowed to teach our children at our State University?

Is it any wonder that the last legislature passed the Speaker Ban Law? This is further evidence that all is far from being well at our University.
